11 June 2024

Dan Wootton is a prominent British journalist and broadcaster known for his work in both print and television media. Born in Wellington, New Zealand, Wootton began his career in journalism in his native country before moving to the United Kingdom in 2004.

Wootton's early career saw him writing for the "News of the World," where he quickly made a name for himself with his entertainment and showbiz coverage. Following the closure of the "News of the World" in 2011, Wootton joined "The Sun," where he continued to build his reputation as an influential entertainment journalist. At "The Sun," he held various roles, including Head of Showbiz and Associate Editor, and became known for breaking major stories and celebrity exclusives.

In addition to his print journalism career, Wootton expanded into broadcasting. He became a regular contributor and commentator on television and radio, appearing on shows such as "Lorraine" and "This Morning." His charismatic and often controversial style has garnered both acclaim and criticism.

In 2020, Wootton took on a new role as Executive Editor and presenter at GB News, a UK-based news channel. At GB News, he hosted "Tonight Live with Dan Wootton," where he covered a range of topics from current affairs to cultural debates.

Dan Wootton's career is marked by his bold and sometimes polarizing approach to journalism, making him a significant figure in the contemporary British media landscape.
