

Farage, Nationalism, The Silent Majority, Civil Voice and Truth to Power

31 May 2024

During a recent X Space discussion I attended I made the following notes:

On the question of Farage, I had hoped he would stand as an MP and then go off to the US to support Trump. On reflection, I think he made the right decision as having both a UK Labour government and a Biden POTUS doesn't bare thinking about. Trump is a priority.

Nationalism is not a dirty word, nor racism. We need to remove Political Correctness and Wokeness from the British vocabulary. There is much to be said for every country in the world to be nationalistic while maintaining respect for other nations and the needs of refugees.

The so-called silent majority must now find its voice. There has not been a right-wing uprising of late, because we have always been here; quietly electing a Tory government more often than a Labour one. Over the course of history, the Conservatives have been in power longest.

To make a difference the silent majority must now stand up and get involved. Many people say they are not into politics, but when when you start talking to the about the things that matter, it's clear they care a great deal. Find local campaign groups and find out how to help.

The number one priority, assuming Labour win the election, is to GET LABOUR OUT again as soon as possible. We must play as dirty as they have done in recent years; find every opportunity to call them out for failure. It shouldn't be that difficult after all.

Concern that the immigration scandal may lead to civil unrest may seem far fetched but if things carry on as they are it is a possibility. We must do everything to keep calm and carry on, but make one hell of an UNHOLY CIVIL NOISE, peacefully.

We must equal or better the number of protestors on the streets until the powers that be hear our messages. But also the pen is mightier than the sword. Try to find the time to write to your Candidate and then your MP at least once a week. Fill their inboxes!

Finally, speak TRUTH TO POWER. In this information age it is really easy to lay our fingertips on the relevant information to challenge the lies and political games that those on the left play all the time. This is particularly important to give the young a balanced view.