

Letter: Prime Minister's address 1 August 2024

3 August 2024

Dear [MP],

Did you see the Prime Minister's address last week?

"His cold, fake, and disingenuous sympathy for the victims and families of the children killed was appalling. He blamed the "far-right" while wilfully ignoring our ever more divisive two-tier policing, if not promoting it. By dismissing our legitimate concerns as merely the actions of the "far-right," he signals his intent to ignore the voices of the people.

There is a global open doors policy, and we, the ordinary citizens, are expected to have no say, even if it results in knives flooding the streets of Our Fair Land. Instead of targeting those protesting against knife crime and drug violence, the government and police should direct their efforts toward those who carry knives and deal in drugs. But they won't because it's far too hard, and they might get called racists. If stopping and searching one specific demographic is necessary, then so be it. The ordinary Brits are not easily angered, but Starmer and his Motley Crew are ramping up their secret police-style activity against us, revealing their true priorities and aims, and in so doing are awakening the Lion within us.

Starmer has zero intention of stopping the boats and the stabbings; he is fully committed to rubbing the noses of the UK people, especially the older generation, in filth. Our anti-UK prime minister plans to repurpose existing laws to clamp down on anyone who dares to criticize the State and the destruction of our way of life. Standing up to this drastic change, which no one voted for, means facing political persecution or worse and being labelled as a member of the EDL. "Your name will be added to the list, face recognition will be deployed," he said, to silence those who disagree with his WEF-inspired policies. Even traveling to protests will be verboten. Knife crime is in. The quiet and respectful British way of life is out.

But Starmer is gravely mistaken. He has misread the public sentiment, and every oppressive action he takes will only worsen the situation. Every secret directive to the now paramilitary police that it's open season on Brits will only further enrage us. We face a knife crime emergency, a population emergency, and a demographic emergency, and all he and his communist cronies can think to do is reinvent the Stasi. I hope the entire UK population wakes up to the full horror of what the Labour party has in store for us. Does he truly expect us to sit back and endure this continual abuse? We are all to become Winston from George Orwell's 1984. There will be no curiosity, no enjoyment of life. Competing pleasures will be destroyed. But always, Winston, remember this: always there will be the intoxication of power, constantly increasing, constantly growing subtler. Always, there will be the thrill of Victory, the sensation of trampling on a helpless enemy. If you want a picture of the future, imagine a boot stamping on a human face—forever. Welcome to Starmer's vision for your future."

(The above is based on the words of YouTuber Jeff Taylor, with whom I and many others agree).

In light of recent events:

- The stabbing of Lieutenant Colonel Mark Teeton in Gillingham
- The assault of three armed Police Officers, one female sustaining a broken nose in Manchester Airport
- Riots in the streets of Harehills, Leeds over a child safeguarding issue
- The murder of three small children at a play event in Southport
- The subsequent arrest of a male carrying a knife allegedly with intent to attack a peaceful vigil
- The knife attack at the Gravesend Gurdwara
- And many others in recent years

All of which involved persons who are second-generation immigrants or allegedly of non-native British descent.

This cannot stand. Ordinary, peaceful, right-minded, patriotic British people must resist this imported criminality and the government's overreach toward the symptom instead of the root cause, demanding a return to genuine concern for public safety and the preservation of our way of life.

The family of the perpetrator of the Southport murders allegedly comes from a region that has experienced past tribal wars and true genocide, which must have been a horrific experience. Many politicians, especially those on the left, and the media claim the reaction sparked by his actions is racist (as many assumed he was a Muslim illegal immigrant). It is not. It demonstrates genuine anger for how the authorities allowed this to happen. The discussion is not about genetics, race, religion, or geography, but rather the cultural and societal life experiences that may have contributed to the serious mental derangement of refugees.

The UK rightly offers refuge to victims of conflicts, such as those in Rwanda in the 1990s. However, if we are to provide this refuge, we must also offer proper support for any stress disorders they may bring with them. If we cannot provide this support, we risk endangering the lives of the already settled population in our country. Anyone arriving with the potential for suffering from Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder or other mental health issues must be vetted to assess any risk posed, including the possibility that they may pass such a state of mind on to their children. Where there is a risk, they must be given adequate support and monitored until it is established that they have recovered. If this country is incapable of providing such support, they should not be allowed into the country.

The same goes for those who arrive (illegally or legally) with any risk of intent to harm. If that risk cannot be contained, it must be expelled. The safety of the settled British population must be the utmost priority.

It is now clear that the Southport rioters' primary grievances were not against the Cardiff-born perpetrator of the murders (who, by the way, was reportedly known to the authorities along with his father) so much as the individual who allegedly attempted to attack a peaceful vigil after the event with a knife — another individual whose cultural and societal background and life experiences are likely unknown.

While it is racist to make assumptions about such perpetrators based on their ethnic background and to treat others from similar backgrounds the same way, anger and grievance against those who pose a risk to this country, regardless of their ethnicity, is not.

Much of the chatter on social media blames the Muslim population in the UK. This stereotyping is not condoned, and many believe the blame lies with a small minority of extremists or those with undiagnosed and untreated mental illness.

However, the Prime Minister himself is stereotyping Muslims as a group – he is quoted as saying “I will take every step to keep Muslim communities safe.” Why use such divisive language? Why not say “I will take every step to keep British communities safe”? What about the unsafe majority population, who are tired of being ignored?

There are some fair questions being asked about this latest response:

- When have Muslims not been safe?
- Are Muslims being stabbed in their schools?
- Are Muslim students being targeted?
- Are Muslim communities being bombed?
- Are Muslim girls being groomed and raped?
- Are churches preaching hate and terrorism?
- Are white Christians committing FGM and honour killings?
- Are teachers in hiding from Christians?
- Are Christians blowing up concerts of kids and buses?
- Are mad Christians stabbing soldiers?

Some have said this Christian country is being raped, pillaged, and decimated by a large influx of people who hate us. Yet we are the ones to be arrested and silenced.

In his address, Starmer made a thinly veiled threat to Elon Musk and our Freedom of Speech: “Let me also say to large social media companies and those that run them. Violent disorder clearly whipped up online, that is also a crime... The law must be upheld... We will take all necessary action to keep our streets safe.”

Even a single complaint has prompted RAF 14 Squadron to ditch its “Crusaders” nickname over concerns it is offensive to Muslims. Why are we kowtowing to 6.5% of the population, even over our proud British history? History that made Britain what it is today for all those welcomed here to enjoy. This censorship of patriotism is abhorrent and disrespectful, not least to our forebears who fought and died for this country, including my own grandparents.

Many are disgusted and depressed about where this country is being taken.

However, since Labour took office, the rate of change seems to be accelerating. There is genuine fear for the future; whether or not people will feel welcome in their own country in a few years' time.

Some are calling for a vote of no confidence in this government - already! This sentiment is understandable.

There is nothing wrong with the long-established multi-racial, multi-ethnic, and multi-religious society in the UK, where everyone is content and willing to declare their loyalty to the State and His Majesty the King, and to support Christian British values and British law and order. Multiculturalism, however, is a very different matter and has been proven to be divisive and damaging to society and democracy due to a significant and growing population of those who seem to reject and not recognise, and seek to change the values and rule of law of the country they wish to call home.

“The antidote to the slippery slope of multi-culturalism is pluralism! A clear set of defining values, that form a core of overarching shared national identity. Now whatever the faith, whatever the background, whatever the ethnicity, whatever the origin, it should be Nation First! Flag First! Every. Single. Time. But you know, more than that, I think it is a sense of belonging, a sense of identity, and a sense of pride that our nation provides for each and every one of us.” - Amandeep Sign Bhogal, Founding Chairman, Global Britain Centre.

Many urge you to do everything you can to impress upon the Home Secretary and the Prime Minister that it is imperative to address the causes of crime and violence in the UK, because treating only the symptoms will encourage it to propagate. There has already been one recent incident in your constituency. Please do not allow the rate of such criminality to accelerate on your doorstep or elsewhere.

Yours sincerely
